The Irvington Milling Co., has bought 3,000 bushels at 87 cents, and a quantity has been bought by Jeff Hook, of the Hardinsburg Milling Co., at 84 cents.

Dickson Bros., at Stephensport, have purchased 700 bushels at 83 cents.

CHURCH OF UNITED BRETHREN

At Tar Springs Taken Over By Methodists.

The church of the United Brethren which has just been built at the Tar Springs by the little band of followers of that faith, has been taken over by the Methodist church. The followers of the United Brethren faith living at Tar Springs, though small in numbers, are large in works, and they have labored diligently to establish their church on a firm foundation. However, the task was too much for them and it was found advisable to turn it into a Methodist church. Rev. B. M. Carter, of this city, and Mr. W. T. Holiday, pastor of the Tar Springs, have assumed the leadership against the church, and religious services will be conducted in the building every Sunday afternoon by the Rev. Currie.

FEAST FIT FOR THE GODS AND GUESTS GALORE TO PAY IT HOMAGE

466 People of The Easton Community Gather Together at Birthday Anniversary on Last Sunday, a Sumptuous Repast Was Spread and Withal a Gala Day Was Had.

The multitude that partook of dinner at the home of Mr. John H. Sanders, of the Easton neighborhood, on last Sunday did not rival numerically the multitude at the Sea of Galilee, of biblical history, but the seven loaves and fishes that satisfied the hunger of that vast assemblage would have failed of their purpose at Sunday's gathering unless a like miracle were performed.

When it is stated that guests dropping in upon a neighbor to celebrate his birthday anniversary had eaten a 280-pound hog and several cobs of promising young roosters, gizzards and all, besides diminishing the pastures about, Breckenridge county would certainly gain the reputation of the best past masters in the art of gastronomy. But when the number of people whose appetites were appealed at the home of Mr. Sanders is given no surprise will be occasioned at the quantity of food consumed.

All told, there were 466 people that gathered around the festive board at the home of Mr. Sanders on last Sunday. It was the occasion of the fifty-eighth anniversary of his birth. The big, the day was one that the people of the Easton community will store away in pleasant memories and more especially will their thoughts revert to it as each anniversary of Mr. Sanders' birth-day draws near.

Mr. Charles E. Couth, one of the oldest citizens of the county, died Saturday at the home of his son, John Couth, of the Skillman neighborhood, at the age of eighty-three years. Death was due to infirmities incident to old age.

Mr. Couth was a respected and substantial citizen.

TRIPLETS

Born to Mrs. Thomas Mason, Formerly of This County.

Mattingly, Ky., July 9.—(special.)—News has been received here of the birth of triplets to the wife of Mr. Thomas Mason, of Evansville, Ind., formerly of this county, on June 28.

Two of the infants are living and enjoying perfect health. They weigh six and one-half pounds each.

Mr. Mason is the son of James Mason, of Pigeon, and his wife was formerly Miss Lula Newman, of the same neighborhood.

Interesting Heirloom.

Mr. John D. Babage, of this city, possesses an interesting heirloom handed down to her from her father, the late Franklin Datto of Meade county. It is a colonial bed, and the interest that attaches to it arises from its antiquity and the rarity of such pieces of furniture nowadays. The bed has been in the Datto family nearly sixty years, and is remarkably preserved. It is of solid walnut and makes a unique addition to the bedroom furniture. Aside from its intrinsic value, which is considerable, Mrs. Babage has great interest in the stories of an heirloom as is shown from the manner in which she has had it restored by Mr. C. G. Schwarz, the upholsterer.

SUGGESTS

TOBACCO

WAREHOUSE

For Cloverport, Owned and Controlled By Farmers.

That a tobacco warehouse built in Cloverport by the farmers and a local market for the seed established, would be the biggest boom that could come to the tobacco growers of this section, is the opinion expressed by Mr. John H. Phelon, the well-known tobacconist of this city.

Mr. Phelon, in speaking of the matter to The News, outlined the plan as suggested by him as follows: That the farmers build a warehouse of sufficient dimensions to house comfortably any quantity of tobacco, employ on a salary an expert rehander to sort the various types and otherwise get it into the proper and most advantageous condition for selling. A local market could easily be established, as buyers would come here when informed of an opportunity to make a purchase. Mr. Phelon is confident that a big local market could be established in Cloverport, resulting in higher prices to the farmers and better general satisfaction.

In substitution of his last theory Mr. Phelon says that he never enters his warehouse on the breaks in Louisville, but that he sells to the buyers who come to his warehouse. Only last week he disposed of eighty-two hogsheads of the weed to a representative of an English firm at prices ahead of what is realized on the breaks.

Irvington Epworth League Meeting.

(Too late for last week.) The Epworth League meeting conducted by Mrs. Piggott, on Sunday evening, occupied an hour and a half and was both interesting and instructive. The program had been carefully planned and the young people carried it out most creditably. The mission study for the month was along rather a new line. It dealt with the fruits of missionary labors and was most encouraging to those who know the fields and love the cause and more enlightening to those who are indifferent and uninformed. Charts were used showing the progress of the world's evangelization since 1800 and the proportion of money spent by each denomination toward world evangelization. The Morarians head the list with every sixty-six members supporting one missionary. The Southern Methodists are second to last, it taking seven thousand and a half of this denomination to support one missionary.

Edwin Jolly will lead the devotional meeting on next Sabbath, the subject is Christian Citizenship.

Visitors are cordially invited to these meetings. The hour is seven o'clock.

Special Week-end Excursion Fares.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLow.

COPYRIGHT, 1906, BY G. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY.

He thought of John Burkett Ryder, who he remembered well. Ryder was the man who had recommended that investment in Alaskan stock. Of course, why did he not think of it before? He recollects that at the time he had been puzzled at receiving so much stock, and he had mentioned it to Stott, but Stott had said that he had told him it was customary. Oh, why had he not kept the secretary's letter? But Ryder would certainly remember it. He probably still had his two letters in which he spoke of making the investment. If those letters could be produced, it would be clear that they would clear him at once, so losing no time and filled with renewed hope, he wrote to the Colossus a strong, manly letter, which would have melted an iceberg, urging Mr. Ryder to come forward now at this critical time and clear him of this terrible charge, or at least to be kind to him. The two letters he must have in his possession, as they would go far to help him at the trial. Three days passed and no reply from Ryder. On the fourth came a polite but frigid note from Mr. Ryder's private secretary, Mr. Blake, enclosing the secretary's letter and in reply begged to state that he had a vague recollection of some conversation with the judge in regard to investments, but he did not think he had advised the purchase of any particular stock, as that was something he never did on principle, even with his most intimate friends. He was not sure, but he could depend in case of loss, etc. As to the letter which Judge Rossmore mentioned as having written to Mr. Ryder in regard to having received stock that he had bought, or that Mr. Ryder had no recollection whatever, Judge Rossmore was probably mistaken as to the identity of the man. He recollects he could not be of more service to Judge Rossmore and remained his very obedient servant.

It was very evident that no help was to be looked for in that quarter. There was even decided hostility in Ryder's reply. John Burkett, the man of the moment, was really behind these scenes upon his character? Was it possible that one man, merely to make more money, would deliberately ruin his fellow man whose hand he had grasped in friendship? He had been unwilling to believe that his friend ex-Judge Stott had plotted to hinder him, but that of all his misfortunes, but this was the most pathetic letter, with its falsehoods, its lies, plainly written all over its face, was proof enough. Yes, there was now no possible doubt. John Burkett Ryder was his enemy, and what an enemy! The man had committed suicide when he had incurred the enmity of the Colossus. Judge Rossmore, completely disengaged, bowed his head to the inevitable, but he sent for his old friend ex-Judge Stott.

They were lifelong friends, having known each other for nearly thirty years ago at the law school, and when both were young men about to enter on a public career. Stott, who was Rossmore's junior, had begun as a lawyer in New York and soon acquired a reputation in criminal practice. He afterwards became assistant district attorney and later secured a vacancy occurring in the city magistrate's office, and was successful in securing the appointment. On the bench he again met his old friend Rossmore, and the two men once more became closely intimate. The higher court however, soon passed over him, and he was not long before he retired to take up once more his criminal practice. He was still a young man, not yet fifty, and full of vigor and fight. He had a blunt manner, but his heart was in the right place, and he had a frank, open, his close shaven face. He was a hard worker, a brilliant speaker and one of the cleverest cross examiners at the bar. This was the man to whom Judge Rossmore naturally turned for legal assistance.

Stott was out west when he first heard of the proceedings against his old friend, and this indignity put upon the only really honest man in public life whom he knew, so incensed him that he was already hurrying back to his seat when the summons reached him.

Meeting a fresh and more serious calamity had overwhelmed Judge Rossmore. Everything seemed to combine to break the spirit of this man who had dared defy the power of organized capital. Hardly had the news of Stott's trial been made known before it was made public, then the financial world was startled by an extraordinary smash in Wall street. There was nothing in the news of the day to justify a decline, but prices fell and fell. The bears had all their own way, the big institutions, the railroads, along the line, "copper" especially being the object of attack. The market closed feverishly, and the next day the same tactics were pursued. From the opening, on selling orders coming from no one but where, prices fell to nothing, a stampede followed, and before long it became a panic.

Pandemonium reigned on the floor of the Stock Exchange. White faced brokers shouted and struggled like men possessed to execute the orders of their clients. Big financial houses which stood to lose millions on the fall in the market, sent orders to buy attempted to stem the tide, but all to no purpose. One firm after another went by the board, unable to weather the tempest, until just before closing time the stock market between the hours of nine and ten o'clock, closed. Thousands were ruined, and Judge Rossmore among them. All the savings of a lifetime—nearly $55,000—were gone. He was practically penniless at a time when he needed money most. He still owned his house in Madison avenue, but that would have to go to settle with his creditors. By the time everything was paid there would only remain enough for a modest competence. As to his salary, of course he could not touch that so long as he had a roof over his head, and if he were impeached it would stop altogether. The salary, therefore, was not to be counted on. They must manage as best they could and live more cheaply, taking a small house somewhere in the outskirts of the city, where he could prepare his case quietly without attracting attention.

Stott thought this was the best thing they could do, and he volunteered to relieve his friend by taking on his own shoulders all the arrangements of the sale of the house, furniture, etc., which for the judge accepted only with gladness. Meantime Mrs. Rossmore went to Long Island to see what could be had, and she found at the little village of Massapequa just what they were looking for—modest, neat, comfortable, and, as Mrs. Rossmore said, rather tactless, beggars cannot be choosers. Perhaps it would not be for long. Instantly a deposit was made, so a deposit was paid on the spot, and two days later the Rossmores left their mansion on Madison avenue and took up their residence in Massapequa, where their advent created quite a flutter in local social circles.

Stott was given a room in the cottage so that he might be near at hand to work with the judge in the preparation of the defense, and he came out from the city every evening. It was now June. The senate would not take action until it convened in December, but Stott was too busy to work to be disturbed and no time to be lost.

The evening following the day of their arrival they were sitting on the porch enjoying the cool evening air after dinner. The judge was smoking.

He was not a slave to the weed, but he enjoyed it, and the Rossmores, claiming that it quieted his nerves, caused him to think more clearly. Besides, it was necessary to keep at bay the ubiquitous Long Island mosquito. Mrs. Rossmore had remained for a moment in the dining room to admonish the maid to take only half of all work, not to wreck too much of the crockery when she removed the dinner dishes. Suddenly Stott, who was perusing an evening paper, asked:

"By the way, where's your daughter? Does she know of this radical change in your affairs?"

"Yes, she has started. By what mysterious agency has this girl contrived to keep her secret? I don't understand her heart at all. I can't tell her what's happened. I didn't know it myself."

He was silent for a moment; then after a few more puffs he added confidentially in a low tone, as if he did not care for his wife to hear:

"The truth is, Stott, I couldn't bear to have her return now. I couldn't bear to see her face again."

A sound as of a great sob with which he had been unable to control cut short his speech. His eyes filled with tears, and he began to smoke furiously, as if ashamed of this display of emotion. Stott, blowing his nose with suspicious vigor, replied somberly:

"You mustn't take it that—

"Everything will come out all right, of course. But I think you are wrong not to have told your daughter. Her place is here at your side. She ought to be told even if it means injury to her. You don't know who some one else will or, what's worse, will hear of it through the newspapers."

"Ah, I never thought of that!" exclaimed the judge, visibly perturbed at the suggestion about the newspapers.

"Don't you agree with me?" demanded Stott, appealing to Mrs. Rossmore who entered from the house at that instant. "Don't you think your daughter has what has stated, assuredly I do," answered Mrs. Rossmore determinedly. "The Judge wouldn't hear of it, but I took the law into my own hands. I called her to the bar before day: 'My daughter will be here tomorrow, Endoxia.'"

"You called for Shirley?" cried the judge incredulously. He was so unaccustomed to seeing his ailing, vacillating wife do anything on her own initiative and responsibility that it seemed impossible. "You called for Shirley?" he repeated.

"Yes," replied Mrs. Rossmore triumphantly and secretly pleased that for once in her life she had asserted herself. "I called yesterday. I simply couldn't bear it alone any longer."

"What do you say?" inquired the judge.

"I just told her to come home at once. Tomorrow we ought to get an answer."

Stott meantime had been figuring on the time of Shirley's probable arrival. If the cablegram had been received in Paris the previous evening, it would be what has

Shirley. It was hot, however, without a piano, and Endoxia had decided to consider the idea of an addition to the family. Mrs. Rossmore had said to her the day before:

"My daughter will be here tomorrow, Endoxia."

A look expressive of both displeasure and antagonism passed from the classic features of the biringo, as Shirley, with a cry of mingled grief and joy, precipitated herself in her breast and arms akimbo, she exclaimed in an injured tone:

"And it's a day after you've got now? So it's three in family you are! When I took the place, it's two you would have been. There will be three in future. There is nothing in the constitution of the United States that says we can't have a daughter without consulting our help, is there?"

The sarcasm in this remark did not escape even the dim edifice of the drudge. Shirley relapsed into a drowsy silence and a few minutes later was discovered working with some show of enthusiasm.

The judge was nervous and fidgety. He made a pretense to read, but it was plain that this book was not on his bookshelf. He kept leaving the chair to go and look at the clock; then he would lay the volume aside and wander from room to room like a lost soul. His thoughts were on the dock at Hoboken.

By noon every little detail had been arranged, and there was nothing for the judge to do but wait for the arrival of Stott and Shirley. They were to be expected any moment now. The passengers had probably got off the steamer by 11 o'clock. It would take at least two hours to get through the customs and out to Massapequa. The judge sat on the porch, leaning his ears to catch the first sound of the train from New York.

"I hope Stott broke the news to her yesterday," said the judge.

"I wish we had gone to meet her ourselves," said the judge.

The judge was silent, and for a moment or two he puffed vigorously at his pipe, as was his habit when disturbed mentally. Then he said:

"I ought to have gone, Marthy, but I was afraid I'd look like a fool. The judge could not go, that was certain. It would be too much of an ordeal. Many persons did not know the lower part of their well and had no experience in meeting ocean steamships. There was only one way out—would Stott go? Of course he would, and he would bring Shirley back with him to Massapequa. She had no money, but she had a small circle.

Stott and the judge took up preparing their case, which often necessitated brief trips to the city. Mrs. Rossmore, seconded with sulky indifference by Endoxia, was kept busy getting a room ready for her daughter's arrival. She did not care for Massapequa originally, from County Cork, where an Irish lad with a thick brogue and a husky voice was available so long as things went to her satisfaction, but when they did not suit her she was a terragan. She was neither beautiful nor graceful; she was not young nor was she very good looking. She was disheveled, her face was all askew, and when she dressed up she looked like a valentine. Her greatest weakness was a propensity for smashing dishes, and when reprimanded she would threaten to take her traps and skip. This was the reason of the arrival of Endoxia, who had not bargained for it. When she took the place it was on the understanding that the family consisted only of an elderly gentleman and his wife, that was practically no good, wages plenty, plenty of room, and a good place to live.

"I was thinking of the injustice of it all," replied Mrs. Rossmore, wiping her eyes.

"Fancy Shirley in this place, living hand to mouth," went on the judge.

"That's the least," answered his wife. "She's a fine, handsome girl, I'm told, and all the rest of it. She ought to make a good marriage."

"No matter what state of mind Mrs. Rossmore might be in, she never lost sight of the proper side of things," he added confidently.

Realizing that the judge would like to be left alone with Shirley, Mrs. Rossmore invited Mrs. Blake to go upstairs and see the room she would have. While Stott said he would be with Shirley a while, when they had dinner she hung the bags all over herself and staggered off to the house.

Stott explained that the large pieces and the trunks would come later by express. Mrs. Rossmore took him aside while Shirley was joined Shirley and the judge.

"Did you tell Shirley?" asked Mrs. Rossmore. "How did she take it?"

"She knows everything," answered Stott, "and takes it very seriously. We shall find it of great moral assistance in our defense right in the senate," he added confidently.

Realizing that the judge would like to be left alone with Shirley, Mrs. Rossmore invited Mrs. Blake to go upstairs and see the room she would have. While Stott said he would be with Shirley a while, when they had dinner she hung the bags all over herself and staggered off to the house.

"Ah, yes, now I know it's you," she cried.

"Of course it is, Shirley, my dear girl. Of course it is. Who else could it be?"

"But it isn't the same," insisted Shirley. "It is not the same as your voice. It sounds hollow and empty like an echo. And this place," she added dolefully, "this awful place!"

She glanced around at the cracked ceiling, the papered ceiling, the shabby furniture, and her heart sank as she realized the extent of the damage that had been done to prepare for the worst, to win the fight for her father's honor, but to have to struggle against world poverty as well, to endure humiliation in addition to disgrace—ah, that was something she had not anticipated! She changed color, and her voice faltered. Her father had been closely watching for just such signs, and he read her thoughts.

"It's the best we can afford, Shirley," he said quietly. "The blow has been complete. I will tell you everything. You shall judge for yourself. My enemies have done for me at last."

"Enemies?" cried Shirley eagerly. "Tell me who they are so I may go to them."

"Yes, dear, you shall know everything, but not now. You are tired after your journey. Tomorrow sometimes I'll tell you what you wish."

"Shirley, you," said Shirley, "will hear of it all," she added in an effort to appear cheerful, "what matter where we live so long as we have each other?"

She drew away to hide her tears and left the room on pretense of inspecting the house. She looked into the dining room and kitchen and opened the cupboard, and when she returned there were no visible signs of her face.

"It's a little house, isn't it?" she said. "I've always wanted a little place like this all to ourselves. Oh, if you only knew how tired I am of New York and its great ugly houses, its set of servants and its domestic and social responsibilities! We shall be able to live for ourselves now, eh?"

She spoke with a forced gaiety that might have deceived any one but the judge. He understood the motive of her sudden change in manner, and silently he blessed her for making his secret known.

"Yes, dear, it's not bed," he said.

"There's quite enough," she insisted.

"Let me see." She began to count on her fingers. "Upstairs, three rooms, eh, and above that three more."

They embraced first and explained

afterward. "Tell Shirley got out and went to her mother's arms. "What's her first question?" was Shirley's first question.

"There's her coming!"

The judge, unable to restrain his impatience longer, ran down from the porch outside the gate, Shirley, with a cry of mingled grief and joy, precipitated herself in her breast and arms akimbo, she exclaimed in an injured tone:

"My daughter will be here tomorrow, Endoxia."

A look expressive of both displeasure and antagonism passed from the classic features of the biringo, as Shirley, with a cry of mingled grief and joy, precipitated herself in her breast and arms akimbo, she exclaimed in an injured tone:

"And it's a day after you've got now? So it's three in family you are! When I took the place, it's two you would have been. There will be three in future. There is nothing in the constitution of the United States that says we can't have a daughter without consulting our help, is there?"

The sarcasm in this remark did not escape even the dim edifice of the drudge. Shirley relapsed into a drowsy silence and a few minutes later was discovered working with some show of enthusiasm.

The judge was nervous and fidgety. He made a pretense to read, but it was plain that this book was not on his bookshelf. He kept leaving the chair to go and look at the clock; then he would lay the volume aside and wander from room to room like a lost soul. His thoughts were on the dock at Hoboken.

By noon every little detail had been arranged, and there was nothing for the judge to do but wait for the arrival of Stott and Shirley. They were to be expected any moment now. The passengers had probably got off the steamer by 11 o'clock. It would take at least two hours to get through the customs and out to Massapequa. The judge sat on the porch, leaning his ears to catch the first sound of the train from New York.

"I hope Stott broke the news to her yesterday," said the judge.

"I wish we had gone to meet her ourselves," said the judge.

The judge was silent, and for a moment or two he puffed vigorously at his pipe, as was his habit when disturbed mentally. Then he said:

"I ought to have gone, Marthy, but I was afraid I'd look like a fool. The judge could not go, that was certain. It would be too much of an ordeal. Many persons did not know the lower part of their well and had no experience in meeting ocean steamships. There was only one way out—would Stott go? Of course he would, and he would bring Shirley back with him to Massapequa. She had no money, but she had a small circle.

Stott and the judge took up preparing their case, which often necessitated brief trips to the city. Mrs. Rossmore, seconded with sulky indifference by Endoxia, was kept busy getting a room ready for her daughter's arrival. She did not care for Massapequa originally, from County Cork, where an Irish lad with a thick brogue and a husky voice was available so long as things went to her satisfaction, but when they did not suit her she was a terragan. She was neither beautiful nor graceful; she was not young nor was she very good looking.

"I was thinking of the injustice of it all," replied Mrs. Rossmore, wiping her eyes.

"Fancy Shirley in this place, living hand to mouth," went on the judge.

"That's the least," answered his wife. "She's a fine, handsome girl, I'm told, and all the rest of it. She ought to make a good marriage."

"No matter what state of mind Mrs. Rossmore might be in, she never lost sight of the proper side of things," he added confidently.

Realizing that the judge would like to be left alone with Shirley, Mrs. Rossmore invited Mrs. Blake to go upstairs and see the room she would have. While Stott said he would be with Shirley a while, when they had dinner she hung the bags all over herself and staggered off to the house.

"Ah, yes, now I know it's you," she cried.

"Of course it is, Shirley, my dear girl. Of course it is. Who else could it be?"

"But it isn't the same," insisted Shirley. "It is not the same as your voice. It sounds hollow and empty like an echo. And this place," she added dolefully, "this awful place!"

She glanced around at the cracked ceiling, the papered ceiling, and her heart sank as she realized the extent of the damage that had been done to prepare for the worst, to win the fight for her father's honor, but to have to struggle against world poverty as well, to endure humiliation in addition to disgrace—ah, that was something she had not anticipated! She spoke with a forced gaiety that might have deceived any one but the judge. He understood the motive of her sudden change in manner, and silently he blessed her for making his secret known.

"Yes, dear, it's not bed," he said.

"There's quite enough," she insisted.

"Let me see." She began to count on her fingers. "Upstairs, three rooms, eh, and above that three more."

They embraced first and explained

"We," smiled the judge; "then comes the roof."

"Of course," she laughed; "how stupid of me—a nice gable roof, a sloping roof that the rain runs off beautifully. Oh, I can see that this is going to be awfully jolly—just like camping out. And you have a piano too."

She went over to the corner where stood one of those homely instruments which hardly deserve to be dignified by the name piano, with a cheap, gaudily painted case outside and a thin piano inside, and a wretched piano to be found in the poorer class of country boarding houses. Shirley sat down and ran her fingers over the keys, determined to like it very much.

"It's a little old," was her comment, "but I like these zither effects. It's just like the sixteenth century spinet. I can't stand it, I'm going to dance a little zither."

"What's that about mother dancing?" demanded Mrs. Rossmore, who at that instant entered the room. Shirley arose and appealed to her:

"Isn't it absurd, mother, when you come to see me, you don't have the right to be judge? Isn't it still more absurd that we should be helpless and dejected and unhappy because we are on Long Island instead of Madison avenue? Why should Manhattan Island be a happier spot than Long Island? Why shouldn't we be happy here? We do not know each other, we do not do each other. We never knew how much till today, did we? We must stand by each other now. Father is going to clear his name of this preposterous charge, and we're going to help him to do it."

"Work?" echoed Mrs. Rossmore, somewhat scandalized.

"Work," repeated Shirley very decisively.

The judge interferred. He would not hear of it.

"You work, Shirley? Impossible!"

"Why not? My book has been selling well while I was abroad. I shall probably write others. Then I shall write, too, for the newspapers and magazines. It will add to our income."

"Your book, 'The American Octopus,' is quite a success," the judge interferred.

"So well," replied Shirley, "that the publishers wrote me in Paris that the fourth edition was now on the press. That means good royalties. I shall soon be a fashionable author."

"I'm afraid you will be affected by the financial crisis of the fact that you were indirectly involved with the impeachment proceedings. Ryder could not dream that 'Shirley Green,' the author of the book which had blighted so mercilessly, was the daughter of the man he was trying to save. Shirley, on the other hand, was still unaware of the fact that it was Ryder who had lured her father to his ruin."

When at last she could look herself in her room where no eye could see her, Shirley threw herself down on the bed and burst into a torrent of tears. She realized the extent of the damage that had been done to prepare for the worst, but she could not bear it as it was possible, but now the realization had set in. She gave way freely to her pent up feelings; she felt that unless she could relieve herself in this way her heart would break. ## millions saved

How the American People Profit By the Work of Patent Government Scientists.

MANY IMPORTANT DISCOVERIES

Through the Researches of the Attaches of the Agricultural Department Vast Sums Are Saved to People Yearly.

Washington, July 1—"Millions of dollars—a sum so vast that it cannot now be estimated—have been saved to the American people by discoveries made by the Patent Office during the fiscal year which closed Sunday," declared Secretary Wilson in speaking of the record of the department of agriculture for the year. "Time alone must develop the importance of the discoveries being conducted every day by these men, whose only reward is in the passing fame attained in reporting valuable finds. There would be money in many of these discoveries if the scientists were to patent them in the name of the government, but the people as a whole are the basic factors, for the patents are dedicated to the government to be used by the United States or any of its officers or employees in the prosecution of work for the United States, or by any person in the United States without the payment of royalty."

Secretary Wilson feels that the recognition by the government of these discoveries is far too meager, but he does not hesitate to give to the scientists that little help which he feels that is in his power. Whenever a really important discovery warranting United States patent is made by an employee of the department of agriculture, the secretary advances the salary of the employee as much as it is possible to do, and the patent is issued to the government. In this country in the name of the scientist making the discovery and then dedicated to the United States. If the discovery is applicable to use in a foreign country the scientist is authorized to receive the benefit, but usually the patent is of a character designed to meet conditions in the United States and of little value elsewhere."

Among the patents which have attracted national attention are in relation to the labeling of fresh meat, the preservation of meat, the inspection, the use of field-grown roots as fertilizers and the prevention of corrosion of fence wire and rusting of iron and steel generally. Secretary Wilson estimated that the discovery of an ink which may be used in stamping meat marks that have been government meat inspectors and which will not stain, spread or penetrate the meat will itself save the government between $300,000 and $400,000 next year and a proportionately larger sum annually as the amount of government-inspected meat increases.

ROUNDING THEM UP

Service Has Been Obtained on Eleven of the Standard Oilers.

Pittsfield, Mass., July 4.—After a search lasting nearly two weeks, in which representatives of the United States marshals of Chicago, Cleveland, New York and Boston and have been endeavoring to serve upon John D. Rockefeller, head of the Standard Oil company, a subpoena issued by Judge Landis of the federal court at Chicago. Mr. Rockefeller was located in this city by his attorney, Charles L. Frink of North Adams. After accepting service, Mr. Rockefeller explained that he had not been endeavoring to dodge service, but that he did not know exactly what was wanted of him.

Chicago, July 4.—News of the subpoena, issued by Judge Landis, was received by District Attorney Sins last night. The information came in a telegram from United States Marshal Henkel of New York.

Including John D. Rockefeller, eleven witnesses have now been formally served with subpoenas and will be in Chicago to answer the questions of the judge. Sixteen subpoenas were issued in accordance with Judge Landis's directions. Two of the officials wanted, H. H. Rogers, a vice president of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, and W. H. Tiford, treasurer of the same corporation, are in Europe and cannot be reached. Another, Fred A. Wanner, former general freight agent of the Chicago & Alton railway, left Los Angeles before being served, but it is believed that he would be in court Saturday.

This leaves but two men to be served, William Rockefeller, one of the New Jersey company's vice presidents, and H. R. Payne, vice president of the company. Mr. Payne, who has been in Europe since March, has sent his subpoena back to Chicago. It is not expected that service on these officials will be obtained for the Saturday hearing.

When Mr. Rockefeller appears before Judge Landis he will be asked to testify as to the financial relationship of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey to the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, and also give details of the financial resources of the Indiana company.

Eight bandits at Riga have been sentenced to death.

EMPTIED THE VAULT

This Bank Teller Didn't Believe In Leaving Anything.

New York, July 4.—A reward of $2,500 has been offered for the capture of Chester B. Runyan, the paying teller of the Windham Trust company, who, it is charged, walked out of the office with $56,517 of the bank's money in a suitcase. The theft was not detected until the next morning. It had been expected that the boldness as starting at the dead itself was surprising to those who had intimately known and trusted the man.

Runyan had announced his intention of spending the day with his mother, who died, was at Rochester. He brought his suitcase to the bank in the morning. Though the paying teller's cage is in plain sight of older employees, his vault was literally emptied during the forenoon. Not a nickel remained apparently when at 12:30 o'clock he locked the vault and, taking the money, went to lunch. In forty-five minutes he returned and, picking up the case, left the office. No trace of his subsequent movements has been discovered.

I will wish you to receive my samples of Dr. Shoop's Restorative and my Book on either Dr. Shoop's The Heart or Kidneys. Troubles of the Stomach, Heart or Kidneys, are merely symptoms of a deeper ailment. Don't make the common error of treating symptoms only. Symptom treatment is treating the result of your ailment, and not the cause. Weak Stomach nerves—the inside nerves—mean Stomach weakness, always. And the Heart, and Kidneys as well, have their controlling or inside nerves. Weaken these nerves, and you inevitably have weak vital organs. Here is where Dr. Shoop's Restorative has made its fame. No other remedy even claims to treat the "inside nerves." All the great illnesses, bad breath or complexion, use Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Write me today for sample and free book. ## PROSECUTION ORDERED Pennsylvania's Grafting Contractors Will Be Required to Answer.

Harrisburg, Pa., June 29.—The Capitol Investigation commission has completed the taking of testimony. The commission will now prepare its report to Governor Stuart and civil and criminal prosecution will be instituted by Attorney-General Tread.

The report will set forth, according to a member of the commission, that there was evidence of collusion and conspiracy between Joseph M. Huston, the Philadelphia attorney, and John F. Simonds of Philadelphia, a contractor for the capitol furnishings; that the contracts for the $9,000,000 furnishings were improperly let, and not to the lowest bidders; that the furnishings were not purchased at the prevailing market price; that the goods required; that inferior goods were supplied, not in accordance with the plans specified, and that there is evidence of shortages; that the members of the building committee of the board of public grounds and buildings were guilty of malfeasance in office. In not checking the evident fraud and collusion that existed, and that there were gross overcharges and extravagances in supplying the furnishings.

The Charming Woman

is not necessarily one of perfect form and figure. Many plain girls, who could not serve as an artist's model, possess those rare qualities that all the world admires: neatness, clear eyes, clean smooth skin and that sprightliness of step and action that accompany good health. A physically weak woman is never attractive, not even to herself. Electric Bitters restore weak women, strengthen nerves, brighten complexion, give smooth skin, beautiful complexion. Guaranteed by Severs Drug Co. Price 50c.

New York, July 1.—The new immigration laws placing numerous restrictions upon the incoming of undesirable foreigners, went into effect today. The new law, which was passed only about by these acts, which congress passed in February, is the increase of the head tax from $2 to $4, with the provision that all over $2,000,000 of the revenue so derived will revert to the U. S. Treasury instead of being entirely devoted to the expense of the immigration bureau. Inasmuch as the immigration for the past two years has been over a million annually, the income to the government from this source will be considerable.

Another clause makes the steamship companies subject to a fine of $100 for transporting physically defective immigrants, or those afflicted with leprosy or contagious diseases. The law further provides for the deportation of women found to be lepers, and those within three years after their arrival. The immigration officials are also empowered to arrest those who harbor women of this character, and fix a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment for five years in event of conviction for such offenses.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Don't Know It.

How To Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours. A sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition. If it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble. The frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also a convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

There is comfort in knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidney, liver, bladder and every disease of the urinary passage. It is equally valuable to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, water, beer, tea, coffee, etc. The necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extreme are equally well known. The cure is now realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cure of the most distressing cases. If you need medicine you should have the best. Send by mail and we will send you every bottle.

You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful discovery and a book that tells you all about it. It is absolutely free by mail.

Adress Dr. Kilmer & Sons, Home of Swamp-Root, Co., Birmingham, N. Y. When writing mention you saw it in the Louisville Journal.
